I had been hearing this title periodically ever since I first heard Audra McDonald sing "Stars and The Moon" on her first solo album some years back. And like so many, I fell in love with that song and her amazing interpretation of it. And then a few voice students in past years wanted to work on songs from another Jason Robert Brown show called The Last Five Years and I liked those songs as well. And then as the time went on I heard a few more Jason Robert Brown songs, especially when I taught Drama 345 and 545. The accompanist for the class, Nate Patten, and I used to laugh because we said you could always tell a Jason Robert Brown song -- he's got a sound that is uniquely his own. And I liked all of the songs I heard and saw performed -- there was something warm and lush and theatrical in every one of them -- they always told an interesting, compelling story. And created such interesting and vibrant characters. But I had never listened to the entire cast album of Songs For A New World until I was asked to direct it. And after one listening I was completely hooked.

And found the prospect of directing this seemingly random piece of cabaret/theatre -- on the surface, more a revue than a musical -- both thrilling and daunting. How were these songs connected? Are they? Who are these people and why should we care about them? What is the point of the show as a whole? Is there one? How do I take a 4-person show and expand it to a 7-person cast and still make it intimate, heartfelt and relevant? And on such a large stage? In a word, oy!

Now a musical with no book or discernable story is not unusual. It's been done quite often and quite successfully. Think JACQUES BREL IS ALIVE AND WELL AND LIVING IN PARIS…. truly one of the best of that ilk. I personally love musicals like that. They allow the singer to shine and to create a world out of each song. The songs themselves become miniature plays. A great song should be a great story.

A very young Jason Robert Brown – he was only in his early 20's when he started writing these songs -- set out to do just that. He wanted to tell a story in each song that allowed the listener be a part of the struggles, the joys, the trials, the disappointments, and the euphoria of the character or characters telling the story. And he wanted it to be universal -- something to which we all can relate. He and his collaborator, director Daisy Prince, wanted the piece to be of a whole -- to tell a story of sorts, without actually writing a script. The songs would do that.

Songs For A New World is about exactly what it says: "one moment -- one second -- the moment before it all becomes clear". And it is about the journey we take to find that clarity and the times that we miss it and the times we succeed. It is the journey of a lifetime -- our lifetimes. No one is exempt from the struggle, from the pain, from the revelation, from the enlightenment. The journey can be rough and it can be dangerous -- but it can be brilliant and full of wonder -- and ultimately just amazing -- a precious gift. And at every turn, we make a choice and that is what keeps us moving on. We have no choice but to move on, and it is the choices we make that define our journey. Every choice leads us to a new discovery -- a new world.
In creating this wonderful production I have been blessed to work with the amazing Tom Bloom, Lee Kennedy, Rachael Pickering, Kyle Gettelman, Josh Burns, Cody Schindeldecker, Amber Blanks, Becca Foster, Steven Warner, Nate Wheldon, Adam Smith and Caitlin McLeod. They have tirelessly listened to my ideas, ramblings and half-formed ideas and helped me conceive a magical world in which this story can be experienced. And the team of stage managers, Russ Hicks and Kaitlin Carroll, headed by the incomparable Molly Coyle, kept the cast, crew -- and me -- on track. My dear friend and constant colleague of over 12 years, Greg Harris, and this wonderful band breathe beautiful life into this extraordinary score. And the truly remarkable and seemingly indefatigable Boomie Pedersen – with whom I have worked on countless wonderful projects -- brought so many of my concepts magically to seamless physical life -- and only enhanced what was in the music and lyrics -- and what was in my head! She is my theatrical soul mate and I am honored to be her friend. And of course I had a dream cast: Elizabeth Baxa, Kate Brennan, Myles Glancy, D.J. Lick, Jenna Pastuszek, Nathan Rogers, and Lexi Witman – who brought love, commitment, joy, intelligence, heart and gorgeous singing to every moment of our time together. There are no words great enough to tell you what you all mean to me and what you have brought to my life.

So, now we give you Songs For A New World. Thank you for being here. It is a journey I hope you never forget.

Doug Schneider
