DIRECTOR’S NOTES

Cloud 9 was developed in workshop with the Joint Stock theatre company in 1979. Churchill had been invited to work with the company, and the subject she chose to work on was “sexual politics.” Actors were selected with a range of sexual and theatrical experiences, the group improvised around the issues of sex and power for a few weeks, Churchill went away and wrote the play, and we have it...the first trans-Atlantic hit of Churchill’s career. Cloud 9 opened in London in 1979, and in New York in 1981. A classic of the contemporary theatre, it was first presented by the Drama Department, here, in the Helms in 1989, directed by Richard Warner; Betsy Tucker directed it in 2002 for Live Arts.

For the last fifty years Churchill’s work for radio, stage and television has challenged us to think, laugh, and grow up. Her subjects have ranged from sex and capitalism, through religion, war, and the environment, to, most recently in A Number, cloning.

For over fifteen years, I have carried a strong desire to direct colored girls who have considered suicide / when the rainbow is enuf. When the Choreopoem made its way to Broadway via the Henry Street Playhouse, the Public Theatre and finally the Booth Theatre in September of 1976, I was not able to take my elementary school self from Erie, PA to the bright lights of New York City. In fact, I first discovered Ntozake (she who comes with her own things) Shange's (who walks like a lion) work in college and from that moment on I knew I wanted to have the opportunity to share in the magic of this powerful and compelling piece of theatre. I honor Shange as a warrior poet who revolutionized the American Theatre with a provocative and poignant form that is undeniably African and woman-centered. The substance of the Choreopoem is embedded in its title, says Shange, who feels that a rainbow, which comes after a storm, connotes the possibility “to start all over again with the power and beauty of ourselves.”

Thanks to the UVA Department of Drama, the extraordinary designers, dedicated production staff, talented actors and you the courageous audience for giving me the opportunity to step into the ranks of the many artists who have had the joy of directing this incredible work.

Journey of Call of the Wild

Tonight’s play has been in development for eight years, and director-choreographer Marianne Kubik has been involved since its inception. First produced at Boston University’s College of Fine Arts in 1997, the initial script was developed by Professor Jon Lipsky as part of a course in collaborative playwriting, where the actors developed the characters through improvisation. The play was then produced at the University of Kansas in 2000, and both productions received recognition at the Kennedy Center/American College Theatre Festival. This UVa production marks the most complete stage in the script’s development to date, with significant script and music revisions.

A Lexicon of the Yukon

Allez is the French-Canadian command for “Go!,” which a sled driver might say to mush the sled dogs along the trail. The term mush is a bastardization of another French term, marchons, which means “let’s move” or “let’s march.” The sled driver would steer the dogs toward the right while saying Geel or to the left with the command Haw! The average sled, or sledge, would have 6-12 dogs pulling it across the ice and snow. The dogs’ harnesses were connected to traces – two straps running the length of the line of dogs and becoming the reins for the sled driver. The dog at the head of the team was called the lead dog, and the one at the back, closest to the sled, was the wheeler, or wheel-dog. Any dogs new to the trail were called greenhorns. When the ice melted, the pioneers used sluice pans to sift the river silt for gold nuggets. All gold miners were called sourdoughs because they had no yeast available to them along the trail and had to bake their bread using a sourdough base. Inuit is the language spoken by the Inuit or Eskimo people of the Canadian Arctic. Potlatch is an Inuit term for a great feast where various gifts are distributed, and perhaps from where “pot-luck” was derived.

The playwright wishes to thank Eve Muson, director of the original workshop production of Call of the Wild at Boston University College of Fine Arts, for her contribution in staging the script and helping to develop the story. He also thanks Bill Grady, the composer and music director for the original production, for his contribution in helping to create the musical shape of this play. Finally, he thanks the original ensemble of actors for their invaluable efforts in bringing the characters to life.
