DIRECTOR’S NOTE

Everywhere you turn, someone is producing The Wolves right now. If you love what you see today, you can watch it again at Live Arts in the Spring. I love that. I love that a story has captured our collective imagination so intensely. I can't tell you exactly why. I can tell you that I think it's something about women living their truth fiercely without apology, that it's about women supporting each other instead of competing, that it's about young women, in particular, having a platform for their minds and hearts to be heard, that it's about a place where women get to be warriors. (Take a second—how many plays have you seen where any of those things are true?)

We are living in the times of #metoo, when every single woman has a story of not getting to be everything she dreamed of being for an encounter, a relationship, a career, or a lifetime. We are also living in the times of the Parkland activists, when young people speak truth to power and are told by old (white) men that their opinions are invalid.

What if we just listened? What if we just allowed ourselves to sit still for a moment and let someone who is not us show us a new way of being? The only way it all gets better is if we listen and take care of each other. No one in power is going to do it for us. That’s what this play is about to me. I’ll let this fierce ensemble of warrior women you’re about to see tell you the rest. Thank you for supporting live art, thank you for being in the room with us.

Kennedy Center education and related artistic programming is made possible through the generosity of the National Committee for the Performing Arts and the President’s Advisory Committee on the Arts.

This production is entered in the Kennedy Center American College Theater Festival (KCACTF). The aims of this national theater education program are to identify and promote quality in college-level theater production. To this end, each production entered is eligible for a response by a regional KCACTF representative, and selected students and faculty are invited to participate in KCACTF programs involving scholarships, internships, grants and awards for actors, directors, dramaturgs, playwrights, designers, stage managers and critics at both the regional and national levels.

Productions entered on the Participating level are eligible for invitation to the KCACTF regional festival and may also be considered for national awards recognizing outstanding achievement in production, design, direction and performance.

Last year more than 1,300 productions were entered in the KCACTF involving more than 200,000 students nationwide. By entering this production, our theater department is sharing in the KCACTF goals to recognize, reward, and celebrate the exemplary work produced in college and university theaters across the nation.
